Employee is Sequestered During Trial

There may be times when a jury will be sequestered. A “sequestered” jury is one that is kept together in a private location separate from their homes or workplace during part or all of a trial. This is often done for reasons of privacy or to prevent the jury’s decision from being based on media coverage or the opinions of the public in a high-profile case.

Most jury trials in our District do not involve sequestering a jury.
